Abstract: This article discusses the relationship between a teacher and a student in the process of imparting knowledge and the students' duty to and respect for the teacher.

Keywords: Honor of the teacher, etiquette of the student, virtue of knowledge, education, respect and honor, spiritual heritage, responsibility, development of society, upbringing of the generation.

Dear listener! Humanity has always sought enlightenment and virtue through knowledge and found the right path in life. Islam has made knowledge obligatory for every man and woman and has glorified its importance.

- In our society, the value and virtue of a teacher are great. Because it is these people who play a major role in the formation of the future generation.

Thanks to the hard work of teachers, knowledge is added to the knowledge of the younger generation, and decency is added to their manners.

Education is one of the duties of scientific institutions and their heirs, scientists and teachers. Therefore, since teaching and mentoring are a legacy to us from the ancients, it is imperative that those in this field approach their professions with greater devotion and continue to spread knowledge and enlightenment and teach professions.

We all know that in our country, the issue of education has risen to the level of state policy, and all opportunities are being created to ensure that young people acquire modern knowledge and professions, and that they grow up to be fully developed and knowledgeable people.

As a result, attention has increased to teachers and mentors, and the state is implementing various programs aimed at supporting them, including increasing salaries and creating benefits.

Dear listeners! (students).

"The young generation is a trust in teachers." After all, teachers are responsible for their education. They do everything they can to help them grow into perfect people in the future.

There are several ways to honor a teacher, including:

1. Not walking in front of or next to the teacher, but walking one step behind;
2. Not to sit in the teacher's place;
3. Not to start talking in front of the teacher without permission;
4. Not to talk too much in front of the teacher;
5. Not to ask questions when the teacher is tired;
6. Not to enter the room without permission when the teacher is sitting;
7. Not to look directly at the teacher;
8. Not to gossip or make fun of the teacher;
9. To avoid doing things that will hurt the teacher's feelings.

In short, the student should do everything that will please the teacher and avoid doing things that will anger him.

Because whoever hurts his teacher will be deprived of the blessings of knowledge and will not be able to benefit from the knowledge he has received. All scholars and teachers are people with open eyes, they understand things that most people cannot understand, and they can see consequences that they cannot see.

Because our ancestors in history respected their teachers, their descendants have grown into scholars.

Today, unfortunately, some students, instead of respecting their teachers, have reached the point of acting badly towards them. If we say that this is a literal tragedy, we are not exaggerating. Therefore, we, parents, must constantly teach our children the need to respect teachers and mentors.

In the past, when our ancestors took their children to the teacher, they would say, "Your meat is yours, your bones are ours." If the teacher reprimanded his student and the student complained to his parents, they would say, "Your fault is yours, your teacher did this," and the child would be scolded. Unfortunately, today, instead of reprimanding their children for their mistakes, some parents argue with their teacher, who is trying to correct them, and discredit him in front of other students. After all, how can a student respect his teacher after such an attitude?

The main foundation for the prosperity of the homeland and the upbringing of generations is the teacher. Because a military commander, engineer, doctor, inventor and discoverer, merchant, farmer and craftsman, as well as people of the pen and thought - all this is the fruit of the teacher's work and thought. Therefore, if society wants to develop and progress, then training a teacher and creating a suitable environment for him to fulfill his duty beautifully should be one of the most priority tasks of society.

Dear listener!

We know that the share allocated to education in the budget of developing countries is the largest and most important than any other goal. In fact, attention to the education of young people means attention to the future of the Motherland.

If the authority of a teacher increases in society, the value of science and education increases, and young people become more interested in studying and acquiring modern knowledge necessary for the development of our country. In a society where science is valued, there will be development and progress. It is worth noting that no matter how much respect and attention we pay to teachers and educators who spread knowledge and enlightenment, it will not be enough. As the poet Alisher Navoi, the sultan of ghazal poetry, once said:

Whoever teaches you a letter on every path, with pain,
The reward for that person is incalculable, with a hundred treasures.

There is no exaggeration in these words of Hazrat Navoi. Indeed, the rights of our teachers are incomparable. They are the gardeners of the garden of spirituality. The more we glorify and respect them, the less we respect them.

We all have teachers in one field or another. Some of us learned a profession from our teacher. Others were taught various sciences by several teachers in our schools and universities. No matter who a person is, no matter what field he represents, he needs a teacher to gain knowledge.

It should also be emphasized that when it comes to this, we should not forget that a teacher means not only religious knowledge, but also a person who teaches any useful knowledge. Because in our holy religion Islam, knowledge is not divided into religious and secular. Rather, it is divided into useful and useless.

Any knowledge that is useful for humanity Knowledge is honored in Islam. Words are not enough to describe the work of teachers, their efforts to convey knowledge to their students, and the countless hardships they endured on this path.

Therefore, it is our duty to show respect to scholars, to honor them, and to fulfill their services. The great holy and reverend Sheikh Aidarus ibn Umar Hazraty says:

“Our masters used to say: Whoever is blessed by Allah with the blessing of learning from his teachers, the most important duties he has are to always remember them, to convey their virtues and benefits to the public, to pray for their rights, to ask Allah for their approval, and to show gratitude through deeds. Indeed, the teacher has given him something better than what his father gave him, which leads to eternal bliss.”

Therefore, the respect of a teacher is like the respect of a father.

Therefore, every student is required to respect and honor his teacher and everything related to him, and to treat him with the manners described by our scholars. May the Lord of the worlds give us strength to respect our teachers as they deserve. May the eyes of our paradise not be touched, and may the blessings of peace and tranquility be even greater.

May Allah Almighty have mercy on our teachers who have left this mortal world! May Allah Almighty produce scholars and virtuous people from our children and descendants!!! Amen!!!!
